if with unswerving strength. us by reference to the treaties of byegone ages. urged at all .- London Beview The men and the circumstances of the present time are to be considered first of all, and obligations undertaken in past centuries can only be counted in so far as they are appropriate to the act al state of affairs at the present day. S when the Germans appeal to the semi-apocry; ha constitution of Valdamar, and to a treaty of the fifteenth century, as the true foundation of their claim over Slesvig-Holstein, we have nothing to to answer but that these may have been fitting and useful in their time, but have no carthly connection with existing circumstances. It is as if We were to appeal to the conquests and treaties of Edward I, as forming the actual title by which we hold Ireland, and on the validity of which her connection with the British, Crown is to be dependent. Since these ancient dates the Dunish Duchics have undergone a thousand changes they have been the subject of half'a dozen trea. ties, but we should be bound to held the treatics. new and old, as so much waste caper if they contained aught that was, according to modern idea, inimical to the freedom and happiness of those whom at present they would affect. So we come back to the question, what are the actual rights of the inhabitants of the disputed territories? And in this inquiry nationality and language hely us to a slight presumption, but not override or dispense with proof. If we took them as imperative tests we must consent to the dismemberment of England, of Switzerland nay, of France herself. We must consent to the establishment of the Scottish Highlands and of Wales, and of Brittany, as independent states; we must sever the Alpa according to the German or French tengues of their inhabitants, and must wrest Aleace from the Gallic empire in order to restore it to the sway of the Federal Diet at Frankfort. It is obvious by this reduction and simple, is inadmissible; it is admissible only when pationality is an active force, tending to the positive disruption of existing political fies and not needing the excitement of foreign intervention to fan it into vitality.

But in Slesvig, and even in Hulstein, national lity does not exist in this sense. There was no uprising in German Holstein before or even after the troops of the Diet proceeded to execution in that territory. Such an uprising had, indeed taken place in 1848, but we know, by the experience of Scotland subsequent to 1745, that the lapse of sixteen years after a rebellion may suffice to render even a nationality very content to remain in subjection; for George III., on his accastion in 1760, numbered no more devoted loyalista than his Scottish subjects. As to Slesvig the case is still clearer, since there is no rational pretence that the province that the province is other than Danish. The Cologne Gozette, a sufficiently Tentonic authority, confesses that the reports which had been spread respecting its impatience of the Danish voke have proved illusory that the Grman soldiery have found themselved in a land equally alien in speech and hostile in disposition, and that, save a few German settlers in the towns, there is no part of the population desirous of the German protection and alliance. Yet in the face of these existing facts, the German demand is that, in compliance with doubtful treaties of many conturies disuse, Sleswig and Holstein shall be united, that both shall together be declared part of the German Federation, and shall retain no connection with Denmurk saye the personal union implied in the King of Denmark being also Doke of Slesvig-Holstein. To which the Danes reply by refusing to recognise any community of interest or fate between Danish Sigavig and German Holstein. und while consenting that the latter should remain subject to the Diet, damand that the former shall be recognised as an integral part of independent Denmark. And these are in substance the gival claims between which the Conference

But it is obvious at once on which side of the question lie not merely policy and good faith, but abetract justice and regard for the happiness of the people involved. The German party can al- public? The New York Journal of Commerce, of 218 and 22d ultimo, contains the following remarks upon points of much interest: The subscription to the Five-twenty loan amounting to five hundred million dollars, closed vesterday. As most of our readers know, this security is a six per cent. U. The Assistant Tressurers of the United States have complete organization for this purpose, working with a harmony, facillity and economy unknown to the machinery of any other government in the world. Why should they be changed? Why should Mr. Cisco, as the Assistant Treasurer of the United States for the District of new York, with splendid fire-prop building, and competent and experienced clerks, be set aside to make room for Nationnal Bank No. 1 supposing the latter to be ever so good? The money deposited with the Assistant Treasurer romains on hand subject to the call of the government; The money deposited in bank will probably be loaned out, at least in part, and therefore be subet, to say no more, to the ordinary risks of bahking.
